Introduction

This book is a collection of three-card Lenormand readings focused on relationships between two people – one of the most common topics in consultations.

A brief note for beginners: different readers use different terms for a three-card combination. I prefer the word triad, but you may call it a trio, triplet, or anything else. The name itself is not important.

No two readings are ever truly the same, even when the cards appear identical, because each answer reflects a specific situation and a specific person. For this reason, it is impossible to create a universal dictionary of triads that can be memorized and applied mechanically. Do not try to do this.

If you find triads difficult at the moment, this book will provide you with a clear method of interpretation while deepening your understanding of individual cards. The more you work with these examples, the easier your own readings will become. Think of this book as training: repetition here is intentional and helps fix the meanings firmly in your memory.

This guide includes fifty triads on the theme of love and relationships. Future volumes may explore other areas, so all interpretations in this book are intentionally limited to relationship questions.

All triads presented here were originally laid out as real readings on this topic. Most come from my personal practice, while some are constructed examples that you may encounter in your own work.

Finally, relationship questions do not always produce cards such as the Ring or the Heart. However, in many cases – often in the majority – one of these cards does appear. When it does, it can be seen as a clear sign that the question has been heard and that the answer is directly relevant.

At the same time, it is essential to learn how to interpret spreads that may seem unclear at first glance. This is precisely what this book is designed to help you do.

Three-Card Spread Layout

Depending on your preference, you can choose one of several ways to lay out a three-card spread. The first, and most common, is the classical format, in which the first card represents the past, the middle card reflects the present, and the third predicts the development of the situation in the future. However, this triad can be laid out in two different ways.

The first is shown in Fig. 1. It is called the direct method, as the positional meanings align with the direction of the layout – everything proceeds from left to right, from past to future.

The second method is shown in Fig. 2. The essence of the spread remains the same, but the order in which the cards are drawn is different. In this case, the first card drawn from the deck represents the present, and only afterward are the cards of the past and the future drawn.

The logic behind this approach is that, at the moment of the reading, we exist in the present – in the “here and now” – which is the central point of our perception. A person can only perceive reality from this present moment. Therefore, the first card that appears on top of the shuffled deck reflects the most important aspect of the current situation and should be placed in the center of the spread. After that, the cards representing the past and the future are laid out.

Fig. 2 “Here and Now” method

Additionally, you can lay out three cards without assigning any fixed positions at all. You simply ask a question and draw three cards in sequence. This type of spread allows for more flexibility and a wider range of interpretations compared to layouts with predefined positions.

For this approach to work effectively, you must decide before shuffling the deck which method you will use and how you will interpret the spread. This is important.

As you already know from my first book Combinations in Lenormand, a three-card spread can be interpreted in different ways. You can read it strictly by positions, analyzing each card individually without forming pairs. You can interpret it sequentially from left to right, keeping in mind that the rightmost card represents the outcome. Or you can take the central card as the foundation and form pair combinations with the neighboring cards. In that book, I described all these methods in detail, so we will not repeat them here.

I mention these approaches only because all the examples in this book are interpreted in the way that seemed the simplest and the most clear to me. Sometimes the cards fall in such a way that their message is immediately obvious, and there is no need to “reinvent the wheel” by forcing pair combinations or extracting additional layers of meaning. Do not forget that your main task is to receive and understand the core message of the cards.

I would also like to draw your attention to the fact that this spread is universal in terms of time frames – unless you are using the positional method with past, present, and future. In other words, the spread can describe both the present and the future, depending on the question asked. You may define a time frame before the reading if needed, or leave it open if the primary goal is simply to understand the outcome.

How to Ask the Right Question

Examples of questions that can be answered with a triad:

- “What is the current state of the relationship between these two people?” – “What awaits this relationship in the future?”
- “Does this relationship have potential?”
- “What will the relationship between spouses be like in 5 years?”
- “Why has this relationship been given to me?”
- “What will this relationship with this partner bring me?”
- “What will happen if I end my current relationship?”
- “Will a new acquaintance lead to marriage?”
- “Will I find a new partner?”
- “What are my prospects for finding a long-term partner?”

I prefer to use the simplest algorithm for interpreting triads. First, recall the meaning of each card within the context of the question. Then try to connect these meanings into a single conclusion that answers the question. Always keep your focus on the context and avoid using card meanings that are not relevant to the topic of the spread.

However, as the saying goes, it is better to see something once than to hear about it a hundred times. Or rather, it is better to work through fifty spreads and their interpretations than to listen to theoretical explanations.

So – let’s begin.

Examples of Triad Interpretations

No. 1 – Tree + Ring + Heart

Fig. 3 Tree + Ring + Heart

The Tree card symbolizes growth, health, and longevity. In the context of relationships, it points to a stable connection with a solid foundation – shared values, common interests, and mutual support. On an emotional level, it reflects a healthy emotional environment and the potential for growth and development together. Overall, the Tree often indicates long-term relationships, both in terms of the past and the future.

The Ring card is associated with commitments, agreements, and, traditionally, with marriage or partnership. It confirms the seriousness of the union, highlighting mutual understanding between the partners and their willingness to honor established commitments.

The Heart card represents love, passion, and emotional connection. It indicates that the foundation of the relationship is built on sincere and deep feelings. Love plays a central role, bringing warmth, vitality, and emotional engagement into the partnership.

Together, these three cards form the image of a stable, mature, and emotionally rich relationship in which the partners have taken on clear commitments. This is a positive sign, pointing to longevity, reliability, and mutual understanding.

The triad also carries favorable prospects for the future development of the relationship. The Tree suggests continued growth and a deepening of the bond on multiple levels. The relationship may become increasingly mature and contribute to the personal development of both partners.

The Ring, in turn, indicates that the existing agreements will remain relevant and continue to shape the couple's future. It may also suggest the need to periodically renew or adapt these agreements in response to changing life circumstances.

Finally, the Heart shows that the feelings between the partners will remain strong, warm, and meaningful, with love continuing to serve as the foundation of the relationship.

Overall, this combination speaks of harmony and stability, supported by genuine feelings and a shared recognition of the seriousness of the relationship. The partnership develops on a foundation of trust, mutual understanding, and emotional closeness.

This triad reflects a strong and healthy connection with promising prospects. It describes a relationship in which love, reliability, and mutual commitment are present. In most cases, it is a positive sign for those seeking confirmation of the depth and longevity of their emotional bond.

No. 2 – Ring + Garden + Birds

Fig. 4 Ring + Garden + Birds

According to this triad, the current relationship is in a phase of active communication and social interaction. This is a period in which external connections, discussions, and the surrounding environment play an important role.

The Ring card symbolizes unity, wholeness, and cycles. It points to the stability and continuity of the relationship, as well as the presence of certain commitments or agreements between the partners. Depending on the context, these commitments may be experienced as supportive or, on the contrary, as restrictive.

The Garden card, positioned at the center of the triad, reinforces the theme of the social environment. It speaks of connections with others, participation in public or social life, and a wide circle of communication. In the context of relationships, this suggests that the partnership develops not in isolation, but within a broader social framework – through friends, acquaintances, or shared activities.

The Birds card, following the Garden, indicates conversations, discussions, the exchange of information, and the emotional tension that often accompanies them. In relationships, this may point to a period of active dialogue, during which important topics are discussed between the partners. It can also indicate outside influence – information coming from others or discussions about the relationship within the social circle.

You may be discussing future plans, making joint decisions, or participating in social events together.

It is worth noting that the combination Ring + Garden can sometimes indicate a wedding as an event. Symbolically, this can be expressed as a “basic social unit”: Ring (union) + Garden (society) = marriage.

However, the Birds card significantly modifies this interpretation, as it is more closely associated with communication. Therefore, the triad more often points to discussions about marriage – “talks about a wedding.” At the same time, since the Birds also symbolize a pair, in certain contexts this combination may still indicate marriage, especially if such an outcome is expected or logically consistent with the situation.

If the topic of marriage is not relevant, the Birds will manifest through meanings such as conversations, nervousness, and emotional tension.

Overall, this combination shows that communication will play a key role in the development of the relationship. Participation in social events and interaction with others may act as a test of the stability and reliability of the partnership.

There may be moments of tension, anxiety, or even disagreements, but these are likely aimed at resolving misunderstandings and improving mutual understanding between the partners.

The cards may also indicate an expansion of the social circle or the development of the relationship in a more open, socially engaged context.

The triad indicates the need for open and ongoing communication. In the near future, the development of the relationship will occur primarily through dialogue. It is important not to avoid discussions or leave issues unspoken – on the contrary, honest conversations will help reduce tension and strengthen the bond. If both partners are willing to listen to each other and express their thoughts and feelings openly, the relationship will have the potential to develop in a more stable and harmonious way.

No. 3 – Stars + Sun + Cross

Fig. 5 Stars + Sun + Cross

We will examine this example in two ways. The first is based on a real-life case from my practice, while the second presents a possible interpretation without relying on specific circumstances.

Option No. 1

This is a real spread, and I have known this couple for several years. The peculiarity of their marriage lies in the fact that, despite the outward brilliance of their relationship, the woman perceives her husband primarily as a provider, the father of their children, and a person responsible for fulfilling his duties.

To his credit, he genuinely makes an effort: he takes care of the children, provides for the family at a solid level, and carries significant responsibility.

However, for his wife, this is not enough. The situation resembles the well-known tale of The Golden Fish: no matter how much she receives, it never seems sufficient. They have property, an expensive car, trips abroad, and she does not need to work – yet the husband is still “not good enough.” According to her, he does not give her enough attention, spends time on his own interests, meets with friends, and may even be unfaithful.

A relative of the husband asked me to look into the situation and see where the relationship was heading.

The Stars card shows that, on the surface, everything appears almost ideal. The relationship looks harmonious, although this card can also indicate inflated expectations. If not for the Cross in the final position, one might interpret this as an ideal union.

However, the Cross changes the entire picture. It reveals that beneath the outward harmony lies tension and inner difficulty. The Sun amplifies the Stars, adding brightness, visibility, and an outward focus. Everything appears radiant and attractive, drawing attention from others.

This suggests that the “ideal” nature of the relationship is largely external. The partners may maintain a façade of harmony while avoiding discussions of issues that cause internal discomfort.

The Cross in the final position is a challenging sign. It often indicates a burden that one of the partners is forced to carry. In this case, it suggests that the man may eventually grow tired of constantly giving without receiving in return. This creates a heavy emotional and psychological strain.

Moreover, as I noted in my previous work, the Cross in the rightmost position often indicates that the significance of the preceding cards gradually diminishes. In other words, the outward “perfection” of the relationship may fade over time.

Thus, despite its brightness and attractiveness, the internal foundation of this relationship may prove to be unstable.

Option No. 2

The Stars card symbolizes hope, inspiration, and positive prospects. In the context of marriage, it may indicate shared dreams and aspirations that unite the partners. The relationship may be built on aligned expectations and ideals.

The Sun brings the energy of success, joy, and clarity. In a marriage, it can represent warmth, openness, and mutual understanding, suggesting a harmonious and fulfilling connection.

The Cross, on the other hand, is associated with trials, difficulties, and significant life challenges. In relationships, it points to tests that the partners must go through together. These challenges may either strain the relationship or strengthen it, depending on how they are handled.

The outlook for such a relationship is dual in nature. On the one hand, the Stars and the Sun indicate happiness, harmony, and strong potential. On the other hand, the Cross warns of inevitable difficulties.

This suggests that maintaining and developing the relationship will require patience, maturity, and a willingness to work through challenges. Only by facing these trials together and supporting one another can the relationship become truly strong and meaningful.

No. 4 – Ring + Bouquet + Tree

Fig. 6 Ring + Bouquet + Tree

The Ring card in this triad symbolizes strong commitments and suggests that the relationship is based on mutual attachment and the desire to be together. It may also indicate a long-lasting and potentially official union.

The Bouquet card brings positive energy and symbolizes joy, harmony, and gestures of appreciation. In the context of marriage, it points to a happy atmosphere filled with gratitude, care, and enjoyment of life together. It may also indicate romantic gestures, mutual respect, and a warm, affectionate connection between the partners.

The Tree card represents growth, health, and longevity. In the context of family life, it suggests the steady development of the relationship, a deep emotional and spiritual bond, as well as stability and long-term potential. It also reflects the partners' willingness to support one another and to actively nurture and strengthen the relationship.

Taken together, these cards form the image of a stable, harmonious, and fulfilling partnership with strong prospects for the future. Due to emotional balance, closeness, and a shared desire for growth, this union has every chance of being solid and long-lasting. Mutual respect and sincere feelings create a strong foundation for many happy years together.

Key pair combinations to remember:

– Ring + Bouquet – often indicates a marriage proposal or engagement. If the Garden card is also present and the context supports it, this may point to a wedding as an event.

– Bouquet + Tree – joyful and harmonious relationships with long-term potential, possibly lasting a lifetime.

No. 5 – Snake + Bouquet + Whip

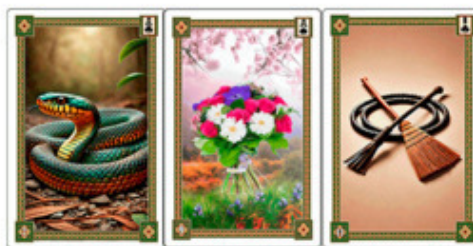

Fig. 7 Snake + Bouquet + Whip

The Snake card often symbolizes complications, deceit, envy, or jealousy. In the context of marriage, it may indicate hidden motives, dishonesty, or a complex and entangled relationship that requires caution and wisdom.

The Bouquet card, on the other hand, is a positive symbol representing joy, harmony, and gestures of appreciation. It points to moments of happiness, satisfaction within the relationship, as well as expressions of gratitude and affection between the partners.

The Whip card signals conflict, arguments, or intense interaction. In the context of marriage, it may indicate frequent disagreements, which in extreme cases may escalate into physical confrontation (especially when combined with the Scythe). More commonly, however, it represents ongoing discussions, repeated arguments, and strong emotional or passionate involvement.

When combined, these cards point to a complex and emotionally charged relationship, marked by alternating periods of harmony and tension. The Snake warns of hidden issues or potential betrayal, the Bouquet brings moments of joy and mutual appreciation, while the Whip adds a dynamic of intense exchanges that may either strain or energize the relationship.

From a more pragmatic perspective, the combination Snake + Bouquet may indicate a gift or gesture given with hidden intentions. It can represent an attractive offer that should be approached with caution.

The combination Bouquet + Whip in relationships may point to unconventional or questionable patterns of behavior on the part of one partner. In rare cases, it can suggest a tendency to derive pleasure from pain or dominance. However, such manifestations are uncommon in practice.

In terms of future prospects, the relationship is likely to develop through a constant interplay between harmony and conflict. To maintain balance, the partners will need to learn how to resolve disagreements constructively and build trust. It is equally important to appreciate positive moments, even amid challenging circumstances.

It should be remembered that the cards are symbolic tools that offer insight, but they do not determine outcomes with absolute certainty. Overcoming difficulties and maintaining a healthy relationship requires mutual effort, open communication, and a willingness to work on the partnership.

No. 6 – Ring + Fish + Clouds

Fig. 8 Ring + Fish + Clouds

The Ring card symbolizes commitments, agreements, and stable bonds. In the context of relationships, it points to marriage or a long-term partnership based on mutual promises and shared understanding.

The Fish card is associated with abundance, resources, and the flow of energy and emotions. It may indicate a deep emotional and intuitive connection between partners. At the same time, the Fish also carries an element of fluidity and uncertainty, emphasizing independence and freedom.

The Clouds card represents confusion, doubt, and temporary difficulties. It may indicate misunderstandings, a lack of clarity, or a transitional period that complicates the relationship.

Taken together, this combination suggests a mixed and somewhat unstable situation. On the one hand, there is clear potential for a deep emotional bond and a lasting union (Ring and Fish). On the other hand, the presence of the Clouds indicates that this connection is currently overshadowed by uncertainty, confusion, or emerging problems.

When the Fish appears next to the Ring, two main interpretations typically arise. The first points to a deep and emotionally rich connection. The second suggests a lack of stability, as the Fish does not provide the same grounded quality as cards such as the Anchor or the Key.

In modern contexts, the material aspect of the relationship should not be overlooked. The Clouds often point to uncertainty related to financial matters. The financial situation – whether shared or individual – is likely influencing the emotional atmosphere of the relationship more than it may appear on the surface.

This triad strongly suggests that the relationship is entering – or is already in – a period of instability. Despite the presence of genuine feelings, confusion, doubt, or external pressures are beginning to affect the connection. Financial concerns or differences in values may be playing a significant role in creating this tension.

If the current pattern continues, misunderstandings may deepen, and emotional distance may grow. However, if both partners consciously address the sources of uncertainty and are willing to bring clarity into the relationship, there is still potential to stabilize the situation and restore balance.

The cards indicate that clarity will not arise on its own – it must be actively created. Avoidance or silence will only intensify the confusion. Open and honest communication will be essential in the near future, as it will determine whether the relationship moves toward stability or gradually loses its cohesion.

No. 7 – Whip + Bouquet + Heart

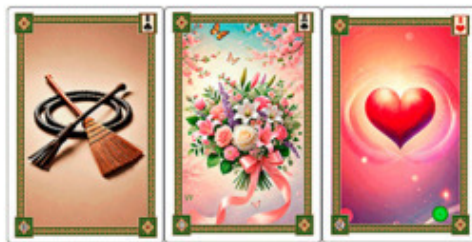

Fig. 9 Whip + Bouquet + Heart

This spread appeared in response to a question about the relationship between a young couple who have been together for about six months.

The Whip card often symbolizes arguments, disagreements, discussions, and emotional tension. In the context of relationships, it may indicate recurring conflicts or misunderstandings that lead the partners into repeated confrontations.

The next card, the Bouquet, brings a more positive influence into the relationship. It is associated with joy, pleasure, harmony, and emotional satisfaction. Despite the presence of conflict (Whip), this card suggests that there is genuine attraction, closeness, and appreciation between the partners.

The Heart card represents love, passion, and emotional warmth. It indicates deep and sincere feelings shared between the partners. Its presence confirms that the foundation of this relationship is built on a genuine emotional connection.

Taken together, these cards describe a relationship that combines both tension and emotional fulfillment. The Whip points to the need for the partners to learn how to resolve conflicts more constructively. At the same time, the Bouquet suggests that such efforts will bring positive results, strengthening the relationship and increasing mutual satisfaction.

The Heart confirms that strong emotional attachment is present, providing a solid foundation for the continuation of the relationship.

Given the age and stage of the relationship, this triad may also reflect the intensity typical of early romantic involvement. The combination Whip + Bouquet may point to strong physical attraction and emotional excitement, further reinforced by the Heart.

From a more practical perspective, if the question concerns near-term expectations, this triad may indicate that after a discussion or minor conflict, one partner is likely to offer something pleasant – a gesture, an invitation, or a gift that will be well received and emotionally meaningful.

From a predictive standpoint, this relationship is likely to continue developing through a pattern of emotional highs and occasional conflicts. However, the positive elements clearly dominate. If the current dynamic persists, disagreements will not destroy the connection but may instead intensify emotional involvement and keep the relationship active.

In the near future, the cards suggest that the bond will strengthen, provided both partners learn to manage their reactions and avoid escalating conflicts unnecessarily. The emotional foundation is strong enough to support further development, and the relationship is likely to deepen rather than fade.

No. 8 – Crossroads + Anchor + Mountain

Fig. 10 Crossroads + Anchor + Mountain

The Crossroads card typically symbolizes choice, uncertainty, and the possibility of changing direction. In relationships, it often points to a stage at which an important decision must be made – whether to continue the relationship or take a different path. It reflects doubt and hesitation about the shared future.

The Anchor, in turn, represents stability, durability, and reliability. In the context of relationships, it suggests a strong emotional bond, a desire for security, and a tendency to hold on to the connection despite uncertainty.

The Mountain is commonly interpreted as an obstacle, delay, or serious challenge. In relationships, it indicates difficulties that stand in the way of progress. These obstacles may be internal (differences in character, values, or goals) or external (pressure from circumstances, family, or the environment).

Taken together, these cards show that the relationship has reached a critical turning point. A decision must be made (Crossroads), there is a clear desire to preserve stability (Anchor), but significant obstacles (Mountain) are slowing or blocking progress.

From a predictive perspective, the situation is unlikely to resolve itself quickly. The presence of the Mountain indicates delays and resistance, meaning that the relationship is likely to remain in a state of uncertainty for some time. Decisions may be postponed, and progress will feel slow or blocked.

If both partners choose to remain in the relationship and actively work through the obstacles, there is a chance to stabilize the connection over time. However, this will require persistence, patience, and a conscious effort to overcome difficulties.

If, on the other hand, indecision continues and obstacles are not addressed, the relationship risks becoming stagnant. The Anchor may then shift from a symbol of stability to a sign of being “stuck,” where neither partner moves forward nor fully lets go.

In the near future, the key factor will be choice. The cards indicate that avoiding this decision will only prolong the difficulty. A clear direction must be chosen; otherwise, the relationship will remain under pressure and uncertainty.

No. 9 – Fish + Child + Rider

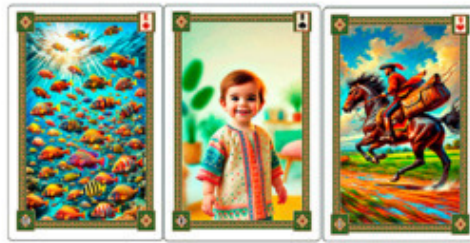

Fig. 11 Fish + Child + Rider

This spread appeared in response to a question about the relationship of a young family, essentially newlyweds.

The Fish card is traditionally associated with abundance, financial well-being, and favorable material prospects. In relationships, it may also indicate emotional depth and strong feelings. At the same time, it can suggest that material stability or financial factors play a significant role in the relationship, pointing to prosperity and mutual support in practical matters.

The Child card symbolizes beginnings, new phases, and sometimes children themselves or a youthful aspect of the relationship. It may indicate innocence, sincerity, and a sense of emotional openness between the partners. It often reflects a playful, light, and joyful dynamic within the relationship.

The Rider card in the Lenormand deck represents news, messages, or changes that arrive quickly. It may indicate sudden developments or an increase in activity within the relationship. Important information may soon come to light, or the couple may find themselves making a significant decision. The Rider also suggests an active and engaged connection, where both partners are involved and responsive.

Taken together, these cards suggest that the relationship between the partners is fresh, emotionally open, and filled with positive energy (Child), supported by a stable or improving material foundation (Fish). The presence of the Rider indicates movement, development, and the likelihood of positive changes unfolding in the near future.

The relationship is likely to evolve quickly, with both partners showing enthusiasm and a willingness to grow together. There is a sense of optimism and forward momentum, suggesting that this union is entering an active and promising stage.

From a predictive standpoint, the cards indicate that the relationship is likely to continue developing positively, with new opportunities, news, or changes emerging in the near future. These developments are likely to strengthen the bond and bring the partners closer together.

At the same time, the triad may also point to the theme of children, specifically conception or the beginning of a new family chapter.

The Fish card, as a symbol of fertility and abundance, naturally relates to this aspect. The Child card reinforces this interpretation directly, while the Rider adds a sense of movement, action, and active effort.

Taken together, this may indicate that the partners are currently focused – both mentally and practically – on conceiving a child or expanding their family.

In the near future, the cards suggest movement in this direction. Whether through intention, discussion, or actual developments, the theme of a child is likely to become more prominent in the relationship.

No. 10 – Book + Ring + Anchor

Fig. 12 Book + Ring + Anchor

The Book card symbolizes secrets, hidden knowledge, and undisclosed aspects. In the context of relationships, it may indicate a lack of transparency between partners or a certain level of emotional concealment. One partner may not be fully open about their past or their true feelings, which can create an undercurrent of doubt or uncertainty.

The Ring card is directly associated with commitment, agreements, and marriage. It reflects the seriousness of the union, the intention to maintain the relationship, and a willingness to honor mutual promises. It also indicates loyalty and a stable bond between partners.

The Anchor card, closing the triad, represents stability, reliability, and long-term endurance. In the context of marriage, it points to a strong foundation, devotion, and the ability to hold the relationship together even through challenging periods.

Taken together, these cards describe a relationship in which something remains unspoken or hidden (Book), yet there is a strong desire to preserve the union (Ring) and maintain stability (Anchor).

In most cases, the hidden aspects are not inherently destructive, but they do require clarification. If the partners are willing to engage in honest communication, these uncertainties can be resolved, leading to a stronger and more secure connection.

The overall outlook for the relationship appears favorable. There is clear potential for long-term stability and commitment. With conscious effort toward openness and trust, the relationship can become even more harmonious and resilient.

From a predictive standpoint, the situation is likely to gradually come into the open. What has been hidden will begin to reveal itself over time. This process is unlikely to damage the relationship; rather, it presents an opportunity to strengthen it through honesty and mutual understanding.

If the partners choose transparency and direct communication, the relationship is likely to stabilize further and become more secure. However, if avoidance continues, the hidden elements may create ongoing internal tension, weakening the relationship from within without necessarily breaking it apart.

It is also important to consider a more negative interpretation of this triad. In cases where there are already grounds for suspicion, this combination may indicate a long-term hidden relationship.

In such a scenario, the triad may be read as “a secret connection that has existed for a considerable period of time.” The Anchor may further suggest that this situation is linked to the work environment or professional sphere.

No. 11 – Ring + House + Snake

Fig. 13 Ring + House + Snake

The Ring card symbolizes commitment, marriage, and agreements between partners. In the context of relationships, it indicates a strong bond based on mutual promises. It may also reflect cyclical patterns, suggesting that certain situations tend to repeat within the relationship.

The House card is associated with stability, security, and family values. It represents the desire to create a safe, comfortable, and structured domestic environment, as well as the importance of maintaining harmony within the home.

The Snake card is the most complex element in this triad. It often points to hidden issues, mistrust, manipulation, jealousy, or even betrayal. It may also indicate the influence of a third party or underlying tensions that gradually undermine the stability of the relationship.

Taken together, these cards describe a union built on commitment and a desire for stability, yet affected by a disruptive factor represented by the Snake. This may manifest as unresolved conflict, emotional dishonesty, or external interference.
